FOREWORD

To analyze and describe the permanently valuable records of the Federal Government preserved in the National Archives Building is one of the main tasks of the National Archives. Various kinds of finding aids are needed to facilitate the use of these records, and the first step in the records-description program is the compilation of preliminary inventories of the material in the 270-odd record groups to which the holdings of the National Archives are allocated.

These inventories are called "preliminary" because they are provisional in character. They are prepared as soon as possible after the records are received without waiting to screen out all disposable material or to perfect the arrangement of the records. They are compiled primarily for internal use, both as finding aids to help the staff render efficient reference service and as a means of establishing administrative control over the records.

Each preliminary inventory contains an introduction that briefly states the history and functions of the agency that accumulated the records. The records themselves are described series by series, that is, by units of records of the same form or that deal with the same subject or activity or that are arranged serially. Other significant information about the records may sometimes be given in appendixes.

When the record group has been studied sufficiently and the records have been placed in final order, the preliminary inventories will be revised and the word "preliminary" dropped from the title of the revision. Meanwhile, as occasion demands and time permits, special reports, indexes, calendars, and other finding aids to the record group will be prepared.

Several finding aids that give an overall picture of materials in the National Archives have been published. A comprehensive Guide to the Records in the National Archives (1948) and a brief guide, Your Government's Records in the National Archives (revised 1950), have been issued. Forty-three Reference Information Papers, which analyze records in the National Archives on such subjects as transportation, small business, and India, have so far been published. Records of World War I have been described in the Handbook of Federal World War Agencies and Their Records, 1917-1921, and those of World War II in the two-volume guide, Federal Records of World War II (1950-51). Many bodies of records of high research value have been edited by the National Archives and reproduced on microfilm as a form of publication. Positive prints of some 4,700 rolls of this microfilm, described in the List of National Archives Microfilm Publications (1953), are now available for purchase.

INTRODUCTION

As World War II was drawing near an end, Members of the House of Representatives realized that a study of the requirements of a sound post-war military policy for the United States was necessary in order that they might "recommend to the Congress" such a policy. To further this objective, the House on March 28, 1944, adopted House Resolution 465, 78th Congress, which had been submitted on March 8 by Representative James W. Wadsworth, of New York. The resolution provided in part as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby established a select committee to be known as the Committee on Post-war Military Policy, to be composed of 23 Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker as follows: 7 members of the Committee on Military Affairs, 7 members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and 9 Representatives who are not members of either such committee. A vacancy in the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the committee, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, to investigate all matters relating to the post-war military requirements of the United States; to gather information, plans, and suggestions from informed sources with respect to such military requirements; to study the plans and suggestions received; and to report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) from time to time during the present Congress the results of findings made and conclusions reached.

On March 29, 1944, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of the resolution, had appointed the following Members of the House to the Select Committee on Post-War Military Policy: Clifton A. Woodrum, of Virginia, chairman; Andrew J. May, of Kentucky; Carl Vinson, of Georgia; Schuyler Otis Bland, of Virginia; Patrick H. Drewry, of Virginia; Alfred L. Bulwinkle, of North Carolina; R. Ewing Thomason, of Texas; J. Buell Snyder, of Pennsylvania; Matthew J. Merritt, of New York; John M. Costello, of California; Harry R. Sheppard, of California; Warren G. Magnuson, of Washington; Lyndon B. Johnson, of Texas; Walter G. Andrews, of New York; Melvin J. Maas, of Minnesota; James W. Wadsworth, of New York; Leo E. Allen, of Illinois; D. Lane Powers, of New Jersey; James W. Lott, of Oregon; Dewey Short, of Missouri; Leslie C. Arends, of Illinois; W. Sterling Cole, of New York; and William J. Miller, of Connecticut. There were subsequent changes in the membership of the committee, but Clifton A. Woodrum served as chairman as long as the committee was in existence. By virtue of House Resolution 55, 79th Congress, adopted by the House of Representatives on January 18, 1945, the committee was authorized to continue its investigation during the 79th Congress.

On April 24, 1944, at the start of the committee's hearings, the chairman disclosed that the committee had adopted the following agenda:
1. Procurement and training of personnel, officers, and men for the military services.
   a. For the regular services.
   b. For the reserve components of both services, including the National Guard of the United States and the Naval Militia. Voluntary recruitment or recruitment through universal military training, or both.
   c. Future employment of the Army and Navy ROTC machinery as a means of procuring and training Reserve officers, as well as other means of procuring and training such officers under either voluntary recruitment or universal military training or both.

2. The organization, military status, and distribution of Reserve components of the Army and Navy, including the National Guard of the United States and the Naval Militia.

3. A study of the development of unity of command as practiced during the present war, with a view to determining to what extent that unity of command and administration may be developed and applied as a part of future military policy.

4. The problem of supply. Research, development, continuing modernization. Continued maintenance of existing facilities, equipment, and stock piles of vital supplies. Mobilization of industries to meet major emergencies.

5. Probable post-war missions of the armed forces. Army, Navy, and Air bases. Interrelations between the sea, air, and ground forces in maintenance and operation of such bases.

The committee concentrated its investigation on three problems connected with sections 1, 3, and 4 of its agenda: whether a universal military training program should be established; whether a single Department of the Armed Services should be created; and how the active and organized support of scientific research and development might be assured to the armed services. The committee conducted extensive public hearings from April 1944 to June 1945, receiving testimony from civilian and military officials of the Federal Government, from religious, labor, veterans, and other organizations, and from citizens. In accordance with the provisions of House Resolution 465, 78th Congress, the committee submitted to the House of Representatives its findings and conclusions in a series of reports: House Reports 1645 and 1923, 78th Congress, 2d session; and House Reports 505 and 857, 79th Congress, 1st session.

The records described in this preliminary inventory, comprising a single series and amounting to about 9 cubic feet, are part of Record Group 233, Records of the United States House of Representatives. Neither the records of the committee nor the information contained therein may be made available to any person without the express authority of the House of Representatives.
